Lamar Soutter Library: A Leader in Service

Office of Medical History & Archives

The Lamar Soutter Library archives include both the collections and exhibitions of the University of Massachusetts Medical School. With the completion of the History of Medicine building, the archives can now house more than 300 linear feet of material. The archives hold documents, correspondence, research notes, manuscripts, printed material, photographs, and audiovisual recordings. The archives are open to the public and provide a valuable resource for research and education.

24/7 Access

Beyond the 24/7 access to library resources provided by the library website, the Lamar Soutter Library offers access to a variety of resources open 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. Faculty, graduate students, and distance learners can access these resources while on campus or from home.

Library Events

The Lamar Soutter Library offers a wide range of events, including presentations, workshops, and special collections exhibitions. These events are designed to engage library users and provide opportunities for learning and networking.

Outreach

The Lamar Soutter Library participates in a variety of outreach programs and initiatives, including partnerships with other libraries, community organizations, and educational institutions. These programs are designed to increase access to library resources and promote awareness of the library's mission and services.

Cultural Events

The Lamar Soutter Library offers a variety of cultural events, including film screenings, book signings, and lectures. These events are designed to enrich the cultural and intellectual life of the campus and community.
Director’s Message
Popular entertainment contains many depictions of librarians. As a child I watched the show ‘Nash Bridges’ and the episode where the Library of Congress was being robbed. For the audience, the librarians were quick to catch the thief, while in reality, the episode was important to introduce the concept of library research. This year’s Annual Report highlights the many accomplishments of LSL librarians. As you can read from the highlights in this past year’s Annual Report, LSL librarians continued to navigate the health information environment. This is done with tools that enable them to effectively and efficiently assist faculty and students on-campus, off-campus, and clinical faculty in the community to find the best evidence to solve a particularly challenging problem. LSL’s core mission is to support the scholarship and history of the UMMS; prepare faculty and students for the research impact factors for promotion and tenure purposes; and it is all accessible from the desktop at work or at home. In fact most of the physical items checked out of the library these days are textbooks, blood pressure cuffs, laptops, projectors, and anatomical models—indeed much of what I thought libraries were has changed. Many of our users are talented professionals with in-depth knowledge and have used our services to find the particular episode detective Jane Rizzoli is dressed in a conservative dark blue suit, her hair is pulled back and she is wearing glasses on a chain for God’s sake. …Have you ever seen this pattern of work? She is working in a taxi and she is waving at a person on a chair. Her body movements imply that she is in a hurry to complete a task, while her attire suggests she is on a mission to create a sense of urgency. …The library is a place where people come to learn and to research. A place where people can come to find the latest information in their field, to complete complex information questions. This library makes a difference to patients and professionals. It is not just a place where you can access online texts in some ways make it more difficult to access. Libraries are places where people come to research and to find the information that will help them understand the different fields of information. The LSL’s Annual Report highlights the many access to online resources, and the achievements of the dynamic LSL librarians. During the fiscal year 2013-14.
