A bullet-train full of celebrities

Hussam Jefee-Bahloul

Life and what it passes on, remind me of you—panoramic elevators and Richard Dawkins’ book about some selfish genes

weird colors
and that “hippie” scent illuminating the air

roasted coffee beans
the texture of old books the sound of a window squeaking on its track and that moment when winter blows against the glass

peoples’ necks moles spreading on bountiful acres of flesh like a chair rocking alone on the porch of this universe

Julia Robert’s smile
Monica Bellucci’s tan and that wicked attractiveness of Scarlet Johansson

dancing reflections on store fronts hunger and crying babies the smell of French fries and the taste of the blues after midnight so, it becomes a habit… every time I sit in a bullet-train going from B to A I close my eyes dismantle the wheels and windows enter the memory space—and use your carefully uploaded portraits to build a photo exhibit.
